Maya

Maya is a rhythmic, airy curtain textile designed by Doshi Levien, offering an open structure and a light, matte expression. Despite its delicate look, it is extremely robust.

Constructed with a leno weave, Maya creates a beautiful play of light and shadow, as conditions change throughout the day. The design is inspired by Indian saris, which combine different transparencies to consistently reveal subtle nuances.

Maya, meaning 'illusion' in Hindi, features an open grid balanced with narrow densely woven bands. This design creates the illusion of a striped pattern, which runs from floor to ceiling.

Discreet, graceful shades associated with traditional saris comprise the textile's palette. These range from gentle notes of mint and grey to understated impressions of bolder tones, such as brick and teal.

Nipa Doshi: "Flowing like the wind. Opaque as smoke. Cool as moonlight. These are some of the associations that come to my mind when I think of Maya. When we selected the colours, it was particularly important to us that they provided a sense of lightness, like a wash of colour to a space."

Made from durable Trevira CS, Maya is flame-retardant. Consequently, they are suitable for both residential and public spaces.
